1. Of the 100 bunkers at the former German Fürstensee ammunition depot at Neustrelitz approximately 65 are left. The remainder, including all but four of the bunkers formerly used to store primings, have been destroyed by blasting. The four priming storage bunkers each have one door and can each hold eight carloads of primings. The other bunkers each have two doors and can each hold 16 carloads of powder or ammunition.
2. All the bunkers are underground and completely camouflaged. The individual groups of bunkers are connected by many concrete trenches. (See enclosed sketch.)
3. A siding leads from the Fürstenberg-Neustrelitz railroad track at Drewin to Fürstensee. The siding was relaid in 1950. All Soviet rail ammunition shipments marked for Fürstenberg are delivered at Fürstensee.
4. Soviet guards in the depot area have been increased and at the time of observation, in November 1951, outsiders were not allowed access to the depot. German laborers are not employed in the depot.
5. [redacted] in May 1950, approximately 20 bunkers were used to store ammunition. At that time there were ca. 12 tanks and 12 trucks in the garages near the quarters barracks.
